WARGAME RANGE
We believe that Wargamers now demand and deserve not only inexpensive figures, but also figures of the very highest artistic appeal and attention to detail and accuracy.

If a Wargamer is going to spend his time, interest and money on amassing a War Game army then it is reasonable for him to demand the best.

It is therefore HINTON HUNT FIGURES policy to produce and supply THE BEST.

The SPECIALITY of HINTON HUNT FIGURES, for we feel it may rightly be called that, is the accuracy and tremendous detail in each figure; each figure is in fact a piece of sculpture in miniature.

No HINTON HUNT FIGURE is produced without hours and sometimes days of painstaking study and research into every facet of the uniform and the designer of HINTON HUNT FIGURES possesses one of the largest reference libraries of military works in the country, together with a fine collection of weapons, equipment, uniforms and armour.

Whether your order is large or small or whether you buy personally or by post, it will be a pleasure to assist you; viewing by appointment.

"Our tribute to the heroic past is its armies in miniature, today."

"To study the uniforms keeps alive the memory of the men."

YOUNG GUARD 1810-15 (TIRAILLEURS & VOLTIGEURS)

The Young Guard was formed to increase the numbers of Imperial Guard Regiments on which Napoleon greatly relied and also to be eventually recruited into the ranks of the Old Guard.

The Young Guard wore corded shakos, short tailed coats, waistcoats, knee breeches and short gaiters.

The Tirailleurs wore round pom-poms in their shakos and had pointed shoulder straps.

The Voltigeurs had tall plumes in their shakos and wore fringed epaulettes on their shoulders.

NOTE: The Young Guard Officers FN/70 and FN/74 had the same patterns of uniform for Tirailleurs or Voltigeurs, only the colouring differed.

MARINES OF THE GUARD 1804-15

The Marines of the Guard saw much service most of it being on dry land, seeing hard campaigning from Spain in the South to Russia in the East.

The Marines wore an elaborate uniform consisting of a corded shako with a tall plume, a braided Hussar style jacket with brass shoulder scales and long trousers with braiding on them. The Officers wore cocked hats and long tailed coats, breeches and tasseled boots.

The Polish troops of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw were amongst the staunchest allies of France. They fought with traditional Polish dash and courage and in the knowledge that Napoleon was the best hope for a free Poland. The army of the Grand Duchy saw much hard fighting standing shoulder to shoulder with the French and added more than a touch of glamour to the scene in their square topped "Lancer Caps".

MARCUS HINTON

Marcus Hinton who's lifelong interest has been Model Soldiers, their creation and the study of uniforms, weapons etc. was first prompted to produce figures due to their unavailability during the wars years.

He was born in 1936 and has lived all but the first two years of life near Maidenhead by the River Thames where he saw his father off to Dunkirk in one of the little boats which brought back the B.E.F. He fondly imagined he was going too as this coincided with his birthday! Has always had consuming interest in all things military, he commenced his extensive collection of militaria with the purchase of a sword at the age of five, narrowly escaping the infliction of grievous bodily harm on his friends with this weapon. Educated privately and somewhat reluctantly, has been a keen student of military uniforms and history. Other interests include an appreciation of female beauty, folk and serious music, good food and wine. Is a member of most Military Historical Societies in Britain and abroad and has visited several historical battlefields, including a study of the battlefield of Waterloo. Marcus Hinton founded the Confederate High Command 1962 a society for the study and dissemination of knowledge of the "War between the States" and organised the highly successful Gettysburg exhibition at the American Embassy in 1963. Joined the Sealed Knot Ltd. Society for Study and Re-enactment of the English Civil War Battles in 1968 and has been an active member, visiting most of the principal battlefields of this war.

His specialist knowledge brought him to filmwork, on the screen but more often behind it, has also been on T.V many times both in the U.K and U.S.A and on Radio.

Married in 1956, has two young daughters. Founded the firm of Hinton Hunt Figures Marketing Ltd., in 1975, producing a wide range of military miniatures in 54 mm and 30 mm scale, covering most periods from the ancient world to the 20th Century. Sculpts all original figures for the firm and receives considerable assistance from his wife Cynthia in the running of the business, which exports much of its production. Ambition to found a military museum has written the chapter on armour in "The English Civil War, A Military Handbook" and numerous articles on military matters.
